Say I have two servers running HA and they both need to use letsencrypt on their nodes, but on one server, the certificate is only valid for one node while on the other, the certificate is only valid for the second. Would this be possible? A: Would this be possible? No, it will not work. As far as my requirements are concerned, different certificates on the same node are required. The reason for that is, that the CSR verification process consists of a number of parts that are carried out on each node. This includes, among others, a "Certificate Search" which checks whether a certificate is already existing on the node. The certificate does need to be trusted by the node, i.e. the subject public key of the certificate needs to be known. The CSR verification then proceeds by comparing this subject public key and a set of lists (master secret, ca certs) with the public key which corresponds to the subject certificate that will be presented by the client. If a public key is known (e.g. if it is from another running node in HA configuration), the public key will simply be compared to the node's own public key. But, if the public key has to be found in a list, it is necessary to send all the information (public key, Master Secret) to the relevant node(s) (as described
